The Bottom Line

China's slowdown, the Senate's Iran-war revolt, and a fleeting US inflation drop frame a day where economic indicators mask the instability underneath. The Gulf conflict escalated again — tanker strikes, a contested Hormuz toll, and Houthi missiles on Saudi Arabia — while Sudan's symbolic death sentence for Hemedti and a record-strength El Niño compound the humanitarian outlook. The Iran-US conflict is no longer just a military story; it is reshaping congressional politics, inflation expectations, and global food security in real time.
