US Strikes Iran as Ceasefire Frays, NATO Divided in Ankara

Strategic Brief

July 08, 2026

The Bottom Line

The US-Iran ceasefire, signed just last month to end the Hormuz conflict, is fraying fast: Washington retaliated for tanker attacks with military strikes on Iranian territory and revoked the oil sanctions waiver that was a core part of the deal. At the NATO summit in Ankara, Trump widened the rift with European allies while rewarding Turkey with a sanctions lift and a potential F-35 deal. Bombs in Damascus targeting Macron's visit exposed post-Assad Syria's fragility. Le Pen's defiant presidential candidacy under a corruption conviction sets up an extraordinary French election. And in Sudan, El-Obeid faces a drone siege that threatens to replicate the devastation of El-Fasher. Across multiple theatres, the day's developments point to the same pattern: frameworks designed to stabilize are breaking down, and the actors filling the vacuum are the ones willing to use force.
