Hormuz Talks Hit Snag as Iran Demands Concessions, US Jobs Market Shrinks, Colombia Joins Trump Security Bloc

Strategic Brief

August 09, 2026

The Bottom Line

The Strait of Hormuz remains closed despite progress in Omani-mediated talks, because Iran is demanding war-ending concessions from the US that Washington has not agreed to — and a missile strike on a UAE tanker shows the strait is still a war zone. The US economy unexpectedly shed jobs, compounding political pressure ahead of midterms. Colombia's new right-wing president immediately aligned with Trump's security bloc, reshaping Latin American alignments. And the Spain-Italy Schengen dispute is stress-testing Europe's open-border system in real time.
